Fresno County Public Library Branch Closure Extended Until Further Notice

The Fresno County Public Library (FCPL) is extending the closure of all branches until further notice. The closure may change depending on recommendations from local and state governmental agencies that will determine a safe time to resume business.

Although there are no in-person services available to the public at this time, FCPL is still providing online and remote services that includes access to the Library's collection of educational and entertaining materials such as eBooks, audiobooks, online magazines and newspapers, music streaming, movies, video streaming and more. Phones are still being answered at the regional branches for your reference needs and staff is still answering questions submitted on the Library's website at www.fresnolibrary.org/ask.

Late fees and fines are being waived for all books and library materials currently loaned out, however all book drops are now opened for customers who wish to return those items.

The Library's website and social media accounts will continue to post updates and information regarding the closure and all other library services.

For detailed information on branch closures and services available during the current shelter in place order, please visit www.fresnolibrary.org or contact Rocky Vang at (559) 970-1135 or rocky.vang@fresnolibrary.org.
